Installment plan template

By law, the IRS can assess penalties against taxpayers, both for failing to file tax returns and for failing to pay taxes they owe on time. If you cannot pay taxes accrued by the original filing date, your balance will be subject to interest and monthly arrears penalties. There is also a penalty for failing to file a tax return, so even if you can't pay your balance in full, you still need to file it in a timely manner. It is always in the best interests of you to pay in full as soon as possible to minimize additional charges. Avoid incurring additional interest and penalties on benefits. Avoid offsetting future refunds. Avoid the problem of receiving loans. If you can't pay your outstanding payments in full, pay as much as possible and visit to consider online payment options. What is a payment plan? A payment plan is a contract with the IRS that pays taxes that you pay on time. If you think you can pay your taxes in full within the extension period, you're required to request a payment plan. If you are eligible for a short-term payment plan, you will not be liable for user fees. Failure to pay taxes when they expire may result in federal tax lien notices and/or IRS taxation action filings. See Publication 594, IRS Collection Process PDF. What are the costs and fees for the payment plan? If the IRS approves a payment plan (installment agreement), one of the following fees is added to the tax bill: The user fee change is effective for on-account agreements entered into after April 10, 2018. For individuals, balances above $25,000 must be paid by direct debit. For companies, balances above $10,000 must be paid by direct debit. Processing fees are paid to the payment processor and restrictions apply. Why do I owe interest and penalties? Interest and some penalty fees will continue to add up to the amount I owe until the balance is paid in full. Learn more about penalties and interests. Why should I pay the setup fee? The Office of Management and Budget has instructed federal agencies to charge user fees for services such as the installment agreement program. The IRS uses user fees to cover the cost of processing on-account contracts. Are you eligible for user fee waivers or refunds?User fee waivers or refunds apply only to individual taxpayers with adjusted gross income determined in the most recent year at or below the federal poverty level (low-income taxpayers) entering long-term payment plans (installment agreements) after April 10, 2018. If you are on a low income, the user fee will be waived if you agreeEnter a direct debit agreement (DDIA) and debit the payment. If you are a low-income taxpayer and are unable to enter DDIA and make electronic debit payments, you will be refunded the user fee up to the completion of the split agreement. If the IRS system identifies low-income people, the online payment agreement tool automatically reflects the applicable charges. How do I determine whether a low-income person is eligible for taxpayer status? If you believe you meet the requirements for low-income taxpayer status, but the IRS does not identify you as low-income, see Form 13844: Application for Reduction of User Fees in the Guidance. Applicants must submit a form to the IRS within 30 days of the issue date of the split agreement acceptance form and request that the IRS reconsider its status.
